

It has recently come to my attention that the National Association of Broadcasters (NAB) has been trying to get Congress and the FCC to limit XM Radio's ability to deliver "locally oriented" content. This is quite disturbing to me because the reason I signed up for and pay money for XM radio is because of the poor quality of programming and services delivered by the radio stations that are represented by the NAB. Perhaps instead of trying to restrict competition, the members represented by the NAB, should put more effort into providing quality broadcast and content to hold the audience they currently have. I pay money every month for the XM Radio services that I receive and I'm very concerned that the companies that failed to provide a product good enough to keep my business are now trying to limit the competition.

Do not allow this travesty to happen. If there was actual competition among the over the air radio stations maybe satellite radio wouldn't be so appealing to us customers. However, due to so few companies owning so many station they feel no pressure to provide a quality product that can compete against Satellite Radio.

Thank you for your consideration.

Allen Williamson